Ho foresaw, in his own bizarre fashion, an International League, which should unite the north and south, the east and the west, and convert Geography from being the foe of Liberty and Fraternity. The exhibition in the field of Mars was not his only contribution to that great end. He was also the untiring advocate of one common tongue, or universal language, as one of the practical means of effecting a general international union. He considered truly that the diverse tongues of Babel must cease before the world became a city of peace. He had ascertained, through his own travels, how much the differences of language impeded the progress of human intercourse, and he was incessantly promulgating the doctrine, that for the human race to become one people, there must exist one common language. Benjamin Franklin, Bishop Wilkins, Dr. Gilechrist, and more recent phenographers, corroborate this doctrine, and the advocates of a perfect commonwealth, from Plato downwards, have ever made it a constituent part of their constitutions. As a general politician, Anaeharsis Cloutz was little known. On the great question of the death of the king, he voted among the ayes, and at the same time passed sentence on his own responsibility on the head of the bouse of Brandenburg, his own monarch, as well as on Louis XVI.: Et jt eondanme pareiUement, a mott bin fume Frederie GnilUmme.
