Excerpt: . . . 11 I do not want to appear ungrateful, but I am not convinced that even this initiative goes far enough or fast enough. It is great that we are accelerating some efforts by as much as 2 years and others by up to 50 percent. But the real question is how long is this going to take to recover and secure all at-risk fissile material Will this be done by 2008 or will we be still talking about it in 2015 I welcome also the initiative that came out of the G - 8 summit, but I would like to hear from Secretary Bolton about whether and how these promises are going to achieve tangible progress. The ac-tion plan on nonproliferation contains some new initiatives and re-iterates others. It adopts or supports several ideas that the Presi-dent has set forth in his February 11 speech. G - 8 members also agreed to expand the Global Partnership that works to secure and dismantle Russian WMD materials. All these agreements and initiatives sound like progress, but will significant new resources be devoted to them by our G - 8 partners, by Global Partnership members, and by our own OMB in our own budget, in our process Too often, bright new initiatives turn out to be largely repackaging funds that already are in the budget. Too often, bu-reaucratic disputes over issues like access and liability starve pro-grams. I wonder whether these disputes can be resolved without engag-ing the President of the United States and President Putin to give them the sustained attention that they need. Too often, promises are not implemented...
