A.--Our advice to you is to gather all the data regarding powdered coal that you can. Especially have the powdered coal concerns advise you as to what they will guarantee in your plant. At the same time, get as many automatic stoker bids as you believe suitable for your case. Then make up a tabulated sheet by which you can compare the various firing systems, point by point, and cost item by cost item. When you get through, your decision will be worth while. In answer to the question of how to start an anthracite traveling grate fire without soft coal, we have secured the following specification from an engineer who has successfully handled fires of this sort for many years. In answer to your letter referring to ignition in a chain grate stoker, I herewith submit a course of procedure in starting ignition in this type of stoker which is followed in my plant of eight Coxe stokers without any difficulty. If followed out, ignition can be started in 20 minutes. First cover the grate in front with a light layer of green coal, then apply kindling, either a couple of buckets of greasy waste or a half dozen shovels of live coal. Apply draft in first tuyere, then shovel about 12 in. green coal on top and let burn to a bright red. Then move grates ahead...
