Excerpt: . REPLY T O Sir William Howe s Observations, >ct WHEN a man, conscious of his own misconduct, or at least lying under the charge bf having betrayed a public trust, a trust of as great importance as was ever committed to any subject, finds himself under the necessity of misrepresenting notorious facts, and even of descending to personal detraction, for his own vindication, he is truly to be pitied. This appears to be the case of the late Commander in Chief of his Majesty s Forces in America. If the Author of the Letters to a Nobleman has contributed to the distress of the General, he has done it with reluctance, from a regard to truth and justice, and a sense of duty to B the the public, and not from any impulse of private resentment; for he frankly declares, he never had...
